I had expected that all ten of us from Broadway would be ~~so~~ staying together in the same floor, but I was separated from the rest and had to stay with another person instead. At first, it was awkward with my new neighbour, but we started talking more and getting comfortable with each other in a short time. I had also not expected that there would be so many of us on the study tour. During the ice breaking session, when I came into the room, there were so many people. I was a bit shy at first, but I opened up quickly. Since there were so many people, I didn't remember all of their names properly.

Before the trip, I was always in my comfort zone, unwilling to socialise a lot. During the trip, I managed to get out of my comfort zone and initiated conversations with other people. I exchanged social media accounts with my new friends and spent a lot of ~~the~~ time until late at night.

The culture there was completely different from Hong Kong. For example, the food. In the UK, we all ate sandwiches for ~~lunch~~ lunch, which everyone got sick of. For me, I quite liked it, except for baguettes, which was hard and difficult to chew.

Overall, the trip was very nice and I made a lot of new friends from different parts of the world.

Thank you :)
